SHOOTING PEOPLE GOOD ENOUGH CONTRACTS

These contracts are designed to be 'good enough' for low budget filmmaking. If you have a commission from a TV station or are making a fully funded feature film, you should seek to use the PACT contracts (Producers Association for Cinema and Television – www.pact.co.uk) which are based on full Equity fees and contain a great deal more details about exclusivity, overtime and repeat fees and copyright clearances.

These contracts are designed to be as clear as possible – no fancy legal language just plain English. The contract should be printed out on company letterhead, 2 copies signed by the producer should be sent out – one for the actor to keep and one for them to sign and return.

WHAT ARE THESE CONTRACTS FOR?

A contract is there to protect - to protect the producer and to protect the actor. A contract makes sure there is as much clarity as possible between both partners so both know what to expect from the other. You should always use a contract with your actors no matter how informal the shoot. It will save you from the consequences of any misunderstandings or disagreements further down the line.

The Shooting People Actors Contract contains things that the actor promises to do – such as turn up. These are covered in the first 3 clauses which start 'you agree' And things the producer promises to do – such as provide insurance. These are covered in the last 6 clauses which start 'we will'.

AT THE VERY LEAST

Shooting People members expect that at bare minimum, a producer will pay for travel and food expenses, provide a copy of the finished film and provide Public Liability Insurance to cover the crew and cast for any accidents during the production. We strongly urge you to retain these elements to the contract, even if you amend or remove other clauses.

RIGHTS AND PAYMENT

Creative people such as directors, writers, composers and actors automatically own the rights to their own creative contribution to a film. In order to sell or show a film the producer needs to control all the rights to the film. On a fully funded production, the producer pays the actor money in exchange for which the actor assigns all (or some) of the rights in their work to the producer. On low budget films the producer is often paying the actor a minimum fee or even no fee at all. Yet they must still obtain the rights they need to distribute the film even if they simply wish to show it online for free.

DEFERED PAYMENT CONTRACTS

Both producers and actors are aware that every low budget feature is a potential Blair Witch even though the odds are very low indeed. It may be that you have an actor who you consider to be essential to the production whose agent is not prepared to sign away all rights for no fee or for only the Equity film school fee. In this case you may want to consider an additional deferred payment contract which promises to pay the actor more money if and when the film is a commercial success.

Copyright & Fair Use Act Permission

Coaches! 101 Productions a sub division of Coaches! 101 A NJ Non-Profit a low budget documentary company, would like to use your public domain content in selected titles.
